Distracted Driving Awareness

By: Chris Wong

Driving while distracted has rapidly become one of the most dangerous driving behaviors on the roads today. As we all know, texting is the most alarming distraction. Taking 5 seconds to read a text message while traveling 55 miles per hour, you would have already traveled the length of a football field without even looking. It is essentially driving blindfolded. April has been designated as Distracted Driving Awareness Month by the National Safety Council in their effort to reduce distraction behind the wheel and helping everyone get home safe. Distracted driving isn't just risky for you, it can be deadly for every nearby driver, pedestrian, bicyclist, and worker.

What many people overlook is that it is illegal for drivers to engage in the use of mobile electronic devices, whether it's a mobile phone, music player, personal digital assistances, and navigation devices. Even while stationary, at red lights and stop signs, it is still prohibited. Under the standard violation, drivers caught under the act of distracted driving will face a fine of about $250. Those caught in a school zones and construction zones will face an increased penalty of $300.

What exactly constitutes as "distracted driving?" Many people think that just using your mobile phone means that you're distracted. However, that is only part of the equation. Distracted driving involves anything that takes your attention away from the task of driving safely. While using your mobile phone while driving is a rapidly growing issue, eating and drinking, talking to others in the vehicle and using your vehicles features (entertainment, stereo, navigation system, etc.). Younger age groups are the most susceptible to distracted driving, more specifically, using mobile phones to call, text, or use social media.

By: Chris Wong

The Hawaii Department of Transportation urges everyone to put their phones away when they are behind the wheel. Also, they encourage these steps for a safer driving experience:

- If it is absolutely needed to use a mobile device, pull over to a safe and secure location to park.
- Ask a passenger to be the “designated caller or texter.”
- Refrain from social media usage.
- Activate your phone’s “Do Not Disturb” mode or place your phone in an area that is not readily accessible in the vehicle until you have arrived at your destination.

What are the consequences of distracted driving? Taking someone's life is a possibility. According to the Hawaii Department of Transportation, there have been 19 traffic fatalities already this year from January 1 through March 8 across the state. According to the Center for Disease Control, about 3,000 people die in auto accidents due to distracted driving every year, which account for around 9% of all traffic fatalities in the United States. No text to someone or post to social media is that important while driving. It can wait.
